

CONTRIBUTORS

ANDREA CHAN is a Ph.D. student at OISE's Adult Education and Community Development program, at the University of Toronto and holds a MA in Public Policy and Administration from Ryerson University. Her current research focus centers on the social support functions found within work integration social enterprises.

OLIWIER DZIADKOWIEC, Ph.D. is a Post-Doctoral Research Associate at Wyoming Survey & Analysis Center (University of Wyoming). He currently conducts primarily quantitative research in tobacco control and chronic disease prevention. His previous research, while at Wichita State University, primarily concentrated on community-based mental health and self-help services.

ELIZABETH A. HOFFMANN is an Associate Professor, Department of Sociology, Purdue University. Her research in cooperative workplaces grew out of her interest in formal organizations and workplace dispute resolution. Research topics include sexual harassment at work, the impact of loyalty on workplace disputes, lactating workers' rights mobilization, and how new laws are implemented in the workplace.

KEITH HOLLINGER completed his Ph.D. in 2011 in the Planning Governance and Globalization program at Virginia Tech. His area of specialization is in rural development, peace and conflict, and international relations. His research has focused on understanding local perspectives on international issues.

AMANDA HURON is a Ph.D. candidate in geography at the City University of New York Graduate Center. Her interests are in urban geography, urban planning, geographies of housing, and community-based research.

GREG MEISSEN, professor of psychology and Coordinator of the Community Psychology Doctoral Program at Wichita State University (WSU), served on the Surgeon General's Council on Self-Help and Public Health. In 1985 he brought the new Self-Help Network, a statewide self-help group clearinghouse and research center to WSU where he served as Director until 2008.

LAURIE MOOK is assistant professor in the School of Community Resources and Development and research associate at the Lodestar Center for Nonprofit Innovation and Philanthropy at Arizona State University. She is the editor of Accounting for Social Value (University of Toronto Press), among other books. Her areas of interest are the social economy, social accounting, and volunteerism.

RHONDA PHILLIPS, Associate Dean of Barrett, The Honors College and Professor at Arizona State University where she teaches seminars on local food systems and community development. Her discipline is community development. She focuses on applied research in quality of life and community well-being and is co-editor of several volumes in Springer's Community Quality-of-Life Indicators: Best Cases series.

JACK QUARTER, professor at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education (OISE), University of Toronto, and co-director of the Social Economy Centre. His books include co-authorship of Understanding the Social Economy (University of Toronto Press, 2009); Researching the Social Economy (University of Toronto Press, 2010), and Businesses with a Difference (University of Toronto Press, 2012).

JOYCE ROTHSCHILD, professor of sociology, School of Public and International Affairs at Virginia Tech, teaches participatory democracy and the effects of globalization on comparative economies around the world. Her last research focused on whistleblowers in the United States. Her current research involves returning to questions of how anti-hierarchical, fully participatory organizations and movements form and achieve their goals.

SCOTT WITUK, Ph.D. is director of the Center for Community Support and Research at Wichita State University. His background and interests include self-help groups, mental health consumer peer support, non-profit development, and community leadership.